Easy4Pro expands email-based freight order drafts¹

Draft Assist now handles mixed pallets and boxes, reads attached documents and fills contact and reference fields. Orders remain drafts for customer review and confirmation.

Easy4Pro's Draft Assist turns shipment-request emails into freight-order drafts for review. The update adds line-by-line handling of mixed pallets and boxes, reads attached delivery notes, invoices and packing lists, and transfers contacts and internal references into order fields.

For your order-entry decision, this is a workflow pattern to assess: the AI creates drafts, while a person reviews and confirms them. Easy4Pro also records AI actions in shipment history, showing what it populated and what still needs attention. The article gives no accuracy, cost or implementation results.

Editor's note: The update describes a human-review workflow, but supplies no performance or cost data for comparing vendors.

Flexport opens its platform to third-party AI agents²

Flexport's new MCP server lets third-party agents pull quotes, book freight and track shipments. The article says updated terms assign financial liability for AI-initiated bookings to the shipper.

Before considering agent-driven freight tasks, review those terms: the article says the shipper bears the financial liability for AI-initiated bookings.

ONE THOUGHT

The Easy4Pro item concerns order-entry drafts; Flexport's report raises a separate question about liability for agent-initiated bookings.
